RED MENACE.

The chief of the United States central intelligence agency, Allen W. Dulles, does not agree with those who attempt to minimize the Communist sabotage threat. "Communist intelligence, espionage and cold war operations," says Director Dulles as he returns from Europe, "are extremely well financed and constitute a major effort."

Americans are urged by him not to underestimate "the skill and ability of the Communists in the field of intelligence and subversion." Much evidence already placed before the public in this country, especially because of congressional investigations, supports Mr. Dulles' evaluation of the reds' diligence and proficiency. Underestimating that menace would be unintelligent.
